Summary

Collection Title:

Frank Clyde Brown papers, 1912-1974

Creator:

Brown, Frank Clyde, 1870-1943; Brown, Frank Clyde, 1870-1943

Abstract:

English professor, Duke University, folklorist of Durham, N.C., and founder in 1913 of the North Carolina Folklore Society. Collection centers around Frank Clyde Brown's lifelong exploration and collecting of North Carolina and Appalachian folklore, which resulted in this vast archival collection of original folklore materials and editorial records for the seven-volume Frank C. Brown Collection of North Carolina Folklore (published 1952-1964). Collection is comprised of field recordings on wax cylinders and phonodiscs; tens of thousands of field notes, transcriptions of original songs, stories, and traditional expressions; musical scores; and numerous journal articles, student theses, books, and lists. Also included are the papers of Charles Bond, a Duke graduate student who studied and expanded the collection in 1970. The vast majority of the folklore sources originated in North Carolina, but there are some materials from other regions. Subjects include: African American traditions; ballads and songs (music as well as lyrics); European roots of North American folklore; folk music; folk poetry; games and parties; oral traditions and storytelling; sayings, names, and superstitions; social conditions in the Southern States; work songs; and North American folklore in general. In addition, one can find rich resources on the study and teaching of folklore, and attitudes during the 1920s to 1950s about Southern customs and communities.

Background

Scope and Content

Collection centers around folklorist Frank Clyde Brown's papers related to his lifelong exploration and collecting of North Carolina and Appalachian folklore, which resulted in this vast archival collection of original folklore materials and editorial records for the project which published Brown's work in seven volumes as (The Frank C. Brown Collection of North Carolina Folklore, 1952-1964). Materials comprise about 1,049 tunes and songs recorded on wax cylinders and lacquer and aluminum phonodiscs, backup copies of the recordings on glass lacquer phonodiscs made by the Library of Congress in the 1940s, 30,000 written notes on lore, 650 musical scores, and numerous journal articles, student theses, books, lists, and other items. The folklore sources originated in at least 84 North Carolina counties, with about 5 percent from 20 other states and Canada, and came from the efforts of 650 other contributors besides Brown himself. Also included are the research notes and other papers of Charles Bond, a Duke graduate student who dealt with the collection in 1970.

Subjects range widely and include: ballads and songs (music as well as lyrics); European roots of North American folklore; folk music; folk poetry; games and parties; oral traditions and storytelling; superstitions; social conditions in the Southern States; African American traditions; work songs; and North American folklore in general. In addition, one can find rich resources on the study and teaching of folklore, and attitudes during the 1920s to 1950s about Southern customs and communities.

The collection is divided into the following series: Cylinders and Discs, which includes the Library of Congress glass lacquer phonodisc copies, Personal Papers, General Editors' Papers, Associate Editors' Papers, Charles Bond Research Material.

The Recordings Series includes 1,049 performances on original wax cylinders and phonodiscs, re-recordings of the cylinders and discs created by the Library of Congress in the 1940s, and supplementary materials. The original wax cylinders and phonodiscs were digitized and described as part of a CLIR/Mellon grant in 2015-2018. A small subset of the Library of Congress preservation phonodiscs, containing performances by Bascom Lamar Lunsford in 1922, were digitized in 2022.

The Personal Papers series includes Brown's correspondence, research files, and the extensive materials in the folklore collection, which include transcriptions and sheet music. All items were gathered by Brown, and taken over in 1943 by Dr. Newman Ivey White, who served as first general editor of the project from its inception then until his death in 1948. The General Editors' Papers include items which were related to and produced by the work of White, and Paull Franklin Baum who assumed duties at White's death, and saw the project through to its completion in 1964. The Associate Editors' Papers have been organized by editor, and include drafts and typescripts for various volumes.

The Charles Bond Research Material Series stems from the work of Charles Bond, a student of Professor Holger O. Nygard at Duke University. Bond opened the archival collection in 1970-1971, and prepared both an outline as well as a Tabulation of Unpublished Items in the collection. This series also includes correspondence, an index, and card files.

Biographical/Historical

Frank Clyde Brown (1870-1943) served as a Professor of English at Trinity College, Duke University, from 1909 until his death. A native of Virginia, he received his Ph.D. at the University of Chicago in 1908. While at Duke University he served in many capacities, including chairman of his department, University Marshal, and Comptroller of the University during its initial construction. These aspects of his life are chronicled in his papers held by the Duke University Archives.

This collection of materials, however, is concerned with activities to which he devoted equal time and energy, the organization of the North Carolina Folklore Society in 1913 and his personal effort to gather and record the nuances and culture of "folk" of North Carolina and its near neighbors, which occupied him from 1912 until his death. Under the impetus of a 1912 mailing from John A. Lomax, then President of the American Folklore Society, Brown as well as other faculty members and other citizens in North Carolina, became interested in folklore and organized the North Carolina Folklore Society in 1913, with Brown as secretary-treasurer. As secretary-treasurer of this organization from its inception until his death, he provided the organizational impetus behind the Society.

Through his course in folklore at Duke, he also sent class after class out to gather the folklore of their locales, both during their studies and afterward. And virtually every summer he could be found in the most remote parts of the state, with notebook and recorder -- first a dictaphone employing cylinders, and later a machine employing aluminum discs provided for his use by the University. The result, by 1943, was a vast collection of field notes, hundreds of musical scores, thousands of audio recordings, and numerous magazine articles, student theses, books, lists, and other items related to this study. The majority of the material originated in North Carolina, with the rest from 20 other states and Canada, and came from the efforts of 650 other contributors besides Brown himself.

Although Brown promised the Society on an almost yearly basis to publish at least part of this collection to which its members were contributing, he never took more than a few tentative steps toward doing so. Thus, at Brown's death in 1943, Newman Ivey White, also a Professor of English at Duke University, close colleague of Brown's, and charged by Brown with continuing the work, inherited the dual confusion of the folklore collection, which was piled in Brown's attic office at home, and the conflicting claims of ownership of the collection of Mrs. Brown, the North Carolina Folklore Society, and Duke University. When it became apparent that all were amenable to seeing the collection in print, White assumed the post of general editor, which passed to Paull Franklin Baum, also a Professor of English and Director of the Duke Press, after White's death in 1948.

Physical Description: 10 boxes

Access Restrictions:

Where available, digital copies of recordings may be accessed either via the links to the Duke Digital Repository presented in this guide or by requesting the associated digital set for an item. Original wax cylinder and phonodisc media are closed for playback but may be requested for visual inspection. Contact Rubenstein Library Research Services for further information.

Scope and Contents

The Cylinders and Discs series collects together two groups of recordings. The first includes the media Brown recorded in the field, and consists of wax cylinders, aluminum discs, and lacquer-coated discs. The second group includes glass lacquer preservation copies made by the Library of Congress, from Brown's originals, in the early 1940s; among these is a set of five discs featuring Bascom Lamar Lunsford, which have been digitized.

Library of Congress glass lacquer preservation phonodiscs

Box 134

Scope and Contents

The Library of Congress preservation glass lacquer phonodiscs were created in the early 1940s from Brown's original wax cylinders and phonodiscs. Five of the phonodiscs contain songs performed by Bascom Lamar Lunsford, and have been digitized.

Scope and Contents

Bascam Lamar Lunsford (1882-1973), musician, singer, collector, teacher, lawyer, was an early advocate for the preservation of "oldtime" Appalachian music. His influence in American folk music was far-reaching. Correspondence between Brown and Lunsford suggests Brown collected these songs from Lunsford in 1922, recording them to wax cylinder at Turkey Creek in Buncombe County, North Carolina. These are among the earliest recordings of Lunsford. Lunsford would later record commercially, and three of his commercial recordings were included by Harry Smith in the influential Anthology of American Folk Music (1952). Two of those songs, albeit in their full and far more polished versions on the Anthology, were ones he sang for Brown in 1922. The Lunsford materials, contained on five phonodiscs, were not part of 2017 CLIR grant digitization project to preserve Brown's original field recording media, since the original cylinders were missing. The phonodiscs were digitized in 2022 and the audio files are open for research.

Scope and Contents

The original inventory lists several other sources for these songs along with Lunsford, although the singer is most probably Lunsford on all the tracks.

There was likely significant loss in fidelity during the transfer from the original wax cylinders to the glass lacquer preservation phonodiscs, and the audio quality reflects this.

Personal Papers, 1912-1974

Scope and Contents

The Personal Papers series includes all items gathered by Brown during his career as folklorist and ethnomusicologist; these materials were taken over in 1943 by Dr. Newman Ivey White, who served as first general editor of the project from its inception then until his death in 1948. Brown's personal correspondence relates to his folklore study and is filed alphabetically. It includes an extensive alphabetical index and a chronological card index, both prepared for the editorial project. Correspondents include local folklorists and fellow professors. Other papers include composition books with fragmented transcriptions of folklore findings, a draft of a talk on folklore, photographs of Brown, and some printed material.

The vast folklore collection itself is filed alphabetically by contributor (the person who passed the folklore to Brown, not necessarily the person who knew the "lore" submitted to begin with) and also includes anonymous contributions. These "manuscripts," as Newman White labeled them, are the earliest extant record of the contributions, ranging from scrawled pencil notes on scrap pieces of paper to typescripts made by Brown and others from memory or made for one of his many efforts to publish a portion of the collection at various points in his life. Occasionally such a typescript will hold contributions of more than one person, and in such a case it is filed with one of the contributors, with cross-references. Especially prominent among the contributors is Maude Minish Sutton, a fellow folklorist, who gave Brown the use of her large findings of songs and games, among other contributions, along with her often voluminous notes on these items.

Part of the folklore collection features folders of clippings gathered by Brown, arranged according to Brown's classification scheme, described below. Another portion of this series is the Papers and Articles subseries, which contains auxiliary folklore information gathered throughout Brown's effects by White and arranged in rough alphabetical order. These materials include specialized bibliographies, student papers, and printed items.

General Editors' Papers

Physical Description: 43 boxes

Scope and Contents

Drafts of publication include the table of contents, title page, and other materials, for Volume 1 and of the general introduction, as well as other miscellaneous materials. Successive progress reports on the project include the Classification Scheme, where White sets out an extended version of Brown's sixteen-point system of folklore classification by which White organized the folklore contributions. Divisions set out included: husbandry, omens, tokens, luck-signs, folk-medicine, magic, divination, housewifery, folk-sermons, pseudoscience, words, place-names, riddles and sayings, children's sayings, games, customs, legends, ballads, and songs. The series also includes newspaper and magazine reviews, correspondence, financial papers, and administrative materials.

Finally, the series includes a vast collection of folklore typescripts, both original and carbon copies, of each item in the collection, arranged according to the Classification Scheme. These were prepared by White. There are numerous references to African American customs as well as folklore traditions in Europe carried over to the United States.
