Background

Scope and Content

This collection consists of material created and assembled by Corden, including writings, correspondence, and project files from his studies and career at Oxford, the International Monetary Fund, and the Australian National University. Items in this collection have been described and sorted by Corden; descriptions are replicated here. He has largely arranged the materials to correspond with his professional career; materials from his time working at Oxford, IMF, and SAIS have been separated from his materials produced in Australia. The collection also contains series based on format, including conferences and lectures, writings and publications, and many files of correspondence with economists around the world.

Biographical/Historical

Warner Max Corden (born 1927) is a white Australian academic and research economist. He is mostly known for his work on the theory of trade protection, including the development of the dutch disease model of international trade. He has also been active in the fields of international monetary systems, macroeconomic policies of developing countries, and Australian economics. He emigrated from Nazi Germany to Melbourne in 1939.

He graduated from the University of Melbourne in 1950 and obtained his PhD in economics at the London School of Economics (1956). He subsequently became Nuffield Reader in International Economics and Fellow of Nuffield College at Oxford University, Professor of Economics at the Australian National University from 1977-1988, and a Senior Advisor in the Research Department of the International Monetary Fund from 1986-1988. He then became professor and, later on, Chung Ju Yung Distinguished Professor of International Economics at the School of Advanced International Studies (SAIS), Johns Hopkins University until he retired in 2002.
