Background

Scope and Content

The bulk of the collection consists of Georgescu-Roegen's writings and lectures, correspondence, research and subject files, audiovisual recordings, and engagement files. Most materials date from the 1960s-1980s and relate to his professional life as a professor at Vanderbilt University. Notable correspondents include Joseph Schumpeter, Friedrich von Hayek, Paul Samuelson, Kenneth Arrow, and other economists. Georgescu-Roegen's work as editor for Econometrica and his extensive writings on entropy and utility are also represented in the collection. Audiovisual materials include music collections, interviews and recordings of Georgescu-Roegen.

The collection also includes a small amount of material from his administrative work for the Romanian government. Typed transcripts and other documents reveal details concerning political conditions in Romania during the period of the provisional government and the Armistice trials following World War II.

Biographical/Historical

Nicholas Georgescu-Roegen (1906-1994) was a white Romanian-American academic economist who was born in Constantza, Romania. He studied mathematics at the University of Bucharest and graduated in 1926. He earned his doctorate in statistics from the Sorbonne in 1930 and became a professor of statistics at the University of Bucharest. He spent 1934-1936 at Harvard University and worked with Joseph Schumpeter and Wassily Leontief. Their research influenced Georgescu-Roegen's work in mathematical economics. Although Schumpeter invited Georgescu-Roegen to stay at Harvard, he returned to Romania in 1934 as both a professor and government official (working several positions, including as the head of the Romanian Armistice Commission) until the Communist revolution in 1948 forced him and his wife, Otilia, to flee the country. The couple made their way back to the United States in 1949, where he joined the economics faculty at Vanderbilt University.

He had widespread economic interests, but is especially known for his scholarship in bioeconomics, also referred to as evolutionary or ecological economics. His research and writings apply the entropy law of thermodynamics to economical activity in markets and society.

Collection Inventory

Writings, 1930-1994

Scope and Contents

Largest in the collection, this series contains the bulk of Georgescu-Roegen's articles, lectures, and related material, as well as some material related to his published books. It has been organized into four subseries: General Works, which includes scholarly articles, conference papers, chapter contributions, and other essays; Books, which includes extensive materials from some of his books, but incomplete documentation from other works; Writings about Romania, which contains drafts and notes from his unpublished research on Romanian history and Romanian peasantry; and Speeches.

General Works

Articles, essays, and other writings are arranged alphabetically by title. Book reviews and opinion columns are foldered together at the end of the subseries.

Writings about Romania

Scope and Contents

Georgescu-Roegen's longstanding interest in Romania and his intention to publish scholarly work about the region is documented in this subseries. Materials have been divided based on what appears to be two separate projects: one monograph on the Basarabian region, and one on the history of Romanian peasantry. There is substantial overlap between these books, and it appears that his projects evolved over time. Unfortunately the drafts are largely undated. Also represented here is his work as an editor and contributor to the Mid-European Studies Center, which intended to publish resources on Romania in the 1950s.

Books

Scope and Contents

Incomplete drafts, correspondence, and reviews of several of Georgescu-Roegen's books, including Agrarian Economics, Entropy Law and Economic Process, and Bioeconomics. The bulk of the subseries documents his work with a translation of The Development of the Laws of Human Intercourse and the Consequent Rules of Human Action (1954) by Hermann Heinrich Gossen, which was accomplished by Rudolf Blitz. Georgescu-Roegen believed Gossen to have been an unjustly unrecognized inventor of the general theory of marginal utility. His 130-page introduction to the translation consumed over a decade of work, all of which is present.

Correspondence, 1930s-1990s

Scope and Contents

Georgescu-Roegen maintained an extensive correspondence not only with leading economists, but also physicists, engineers, and statisticians. There is correspondence with Wassily Leontief, Joseph Schumpeter, Paul Samuelson, Karl Pearson, and Friedrich Hayek. There is extensive fan mail from people of various professions responding to his The Entropy Law and the Economic Process (1971) and Entropy: A New World View (1980), which found resonance with broader environmentalist and anti-growth sentiments. Institutional correspondence includes not only funding agencies but also work for many arms of the US government (for instance, USAID, the CIA, the Department of Energy, various Senate committees, and Brookhaven National Laboratory) and public intellectual platforms like the Club of Rome. Organized into four subseries: Name Files, Alphabetical Files, Assorted General Correspondence, and Romanian Correspondence.

Editorial correspondence from his work for Econometrica is filed in the Econometrica series.
