Background

Scope and Content

Collection consists of photography created by Celeste and Reggie Hodges while living in Sembehu and Shenge, Sierra Leone, as Peace Corps volunteers. The bulk of the photographs have been digitized by the Hodges, and the collection has copies of images in multiple formats (negative and digital, or print and digital, for example). The photographs document rural and routine village life in the 1960s-1970s in Sierra Leone, including local fashion, hair styles, carvings, and artwork; livelihoods such as fishing, carving, blacksmithing, weaving, farming, food preparation, and market selling; religious and sacred ceremonies, including devil dancers, masquerades, and drumming; women and children; Bundu society; people practicing Islam; schools; healthcare procedures and facilities; local architecture; community leaders or chiefs; transportation and vehicles; and landscape scenery including the Atlantic coast region. There are also portraits of individuals, some identified. The digital-only files include images of Gara (textile) production and patterns, and images of healthcare or medical procedures. A small set of children's schoolwork, a Mende grammar book, and an audio recording of children's schooling is included.

Biographical/Historical

Reggie and Celeste Hodges met as Peace Corps volunteers in 1969, when both were stationed in Sierra Leone. Reggie was originally from Durham, N.C., and attended North Carolina Central University. Celeste was originally from Chicago. They married in 1972 and stayed in Sierra Leone to raise their family. The couple worked at several non-profits in West Africa for the next 20 years. They eventually relocated to Durham, N.C., in 2000.

In preparing to donate this collection to the Rubenstein Library, the Hodges included a summary text (excerpted here):

"All photos (except one) were taken by Celeste and Reggie Hodges. Photo credit goes to both of us. We were together for many of the pictures, we shared cameras, and we intentionally don't know which of us snapped particular pictures. The one exception is print-049, which was provided by the subject, Madam Honoria Bailor-Caulker."

"If we'd known in the 1970s that Duke would want our photos 50+ years later, we would have done things differently. We began taking photos as Peace Corps Volunteers in the late 1960s simply because we enjoyed photography and wanted to capture memories of village life. We gave no thought to future use. In 1971 we moved to a town with electricity and running water, set up a darkroom and learned how to develop black and white film and make prints. Sharing prints with the subjects of our photos made it easier to take more pictures and that's what we did."

"I created collections [digitally] by using keywords that came to mind and worked for me."

"If a print is the primary existing format, it is numbered as Print_xxx. If a print is from a Negative or Slide that Duke has, it is numbered as Neg_XXX or Slide_XXX."

Beyond this collection, the Hodges have collected hundreds of examples of African art, carvings, and textiles, from creators across Africa. Recently they have donated much of the collection to American universities and art museums such as the Nasher Museum and the North Carolina Museum of Art.

Collection Inventory

Photographs, 1968-2021

Scope and Contents

Series contains photographs in a variety of formats, including negatives, slides, and prints, as well as digital scans of images created by Celeste and Reggie Hodges. Photographs were taken by the Hodges in Sierra Leone, largely in the late 1960s through the mid-1970s. Images depict artwork, carvings, beading, cloth-making and patterns, hairstyles, architecture, and local culture and fashion in upcountry villages near Freetown. There are also images documenting medical care, fishing and agriculture, sacred rituals and community ceremonies, educational facilities and practices, and local community leaders and chiefs. There are many portraits, some which have names included. The Hodges note that "Sierra Leone has a rich culture of devil masquerades. We included photos of these devils: Bundu, Falui, Gbeni, Gboi, Nafoli, and Rainbow."

There is 1 box and 1 oversize folder of physical photographs, which exist as prints, slides, or negatives. All photographs have been titled and numbered by the Hodges. Refer to the Container Instances to find which format exists for each title and locate the image in the box (or oversize folder).
