Collection Title:

History of Medicine ephemera collection, 1747-1999

Source:

History of Medicine Collection (David M. Rubenstein Rare Book & Manuscript Library)

Abstract:

Collection contains a wide variety of material documenting different medical topics, specialties, institutions, education, and people throughout history, and it is largely but not entirely focused on Western, Euro-centric medicine as practiced by white men. Women, people with physical and mental disabilities, and non-Western medical practices are represented in select materials. The collection consists mostly of publications (article reprints, theses, dissertations, and journal issues), speeches, histories, and profiles of medical professionals and organizations, as well as a large amount of material advertising patent medicines and devices. Acquired as part of the History of Medicine Collection at Duke University.

Background

Scope and Content

Collection contains a wide variety of material documenting different medical topics, specialties, institutions, education, and people throughout history, and it is largely but not entirely focused on Western, Euro-centric medicine as practiced by white men. The collection includes publications (article reprints, theses, dissertations, and journal issues), speeches, histories, and profiles and memorials of medical professionals and documents the history of different medical fields, as well as the contributions of particular doctors to the advancement of medical knowledge and treatment. Also included are materials that partially document the history of select medical institutions and libraries, such as Massachusetts General Hospital and the Transylvania Library's medical collection. Materials focus on adult and pediatric medicine.

A large portion of this collection is composed of material advertising patent medicines and patent medical devices. Some of this material uses Indigenous imagery or racist caricatures of Black people to advertise the products.

Some materials document the role of women in medicine, both as patients and as medical professionals. These materials focus mostly on women as nurses, or on the care and treatment of conditions specific to women, such as pregnancy and menopause. An illustration accompanying a profile of Dr. Francois Prevost depicts a white woman enslaver allowing him to perform a C-section on a Black enslaved woman.

Materials that focus on non-Western or alternative medicine include articles about folk medicine in North Carolina, surgeries performed by the Mayans, Indigenous medicine in Oklahoma and Georgia, and the three founding figures of Ayurvedic medicine in India (Sushruta, Charaka, and Vāgbhaṭa).

Materials that address physical and mental disabilities may use outdated language and include articles about tuberculosis sanatoriums and organizations, the impact of glands upon "mental deficiency," and delirium in people classified as "insane."

Infantile paralysis (Polio) booklets and vaccine information, 1930s-1955 Box 5

Scope and Contents

Two leaflets entitled "Infantile Paralysis (Poliomyelitis)" published by the Metropolitan Life Insurance Company. Leaflets address early detection, prevention, and care of polio, and they acknowledge the relative lack of information about polio. One booklet entitled "When You Have Polio: A Handbook for the Guidance of Adolescent and Adult Patients with Infantile Paralysis (Poliomyelitis)" published by the National Foundation for Infantile Paralysis. Booklet gives general information about polio prevention and treatment but addresses issues adolescents and adults might experience, such as attending college or getting married while having polio, receiving financial aid for medical treatment, and getting along with friends and family. One booklet entitled "A Handbook on Infantile Paralysis" published by Good Housekeeping and compiled by Maxine Davis. Addresses the cause, symptoms, and treatment of polio in different stages (convalescent, acute, sensitive, chronic, etc.), as well as prevention of polio and the measures that different organizations (i.e., schools or camps) can take to prevent polio. One leaflet and accompanying letter to parents about plans for vaccinating children at schools if the Salk vaccine is licensed by the National Institutes of Health.
