Summary

Collection Title:

Darrin Zammit Lupi photojournalism archive, 2002-2025

Creator:

Lupi, Darrin Zammit

Source:

Human Rights Archive (Duke University)

Abstract:

Darrin Zammit Lupi is an award-winning photojournalist based in Malta whose work often focuses on issues related to refugees, immigration, migrants, and disasters in Europe and globally. The collection includes five bodies of documentary work with 100 photographic prints and approximately 20,000 digital files of low-resolution and full resolution images, video, supporting journalistic documents and data, and web archived content of Zammit Lupi's website. The "Malta Detention" project consists of color photographs taken between 2004-2013 of African migrants and asylum seekers in Malta detention camps. The "On Board the MV Aquarius" project comprises color photographs and materials compiled in December 2017 while on board a migrant search and rescue ship operated by the non-profit organizations SOS Méditerranée and Médecins sans frontières. "Journeys of Hope-Refugees in the Balkans" includes color photographs and files created in 2016 while documenting migrants and refugees in the Balkans. "Migrants within the Maltese Community" project entails color photographs and files compiled between 2002-2018 documenting the circumstances of migrants once they leave transitional housing or "open centers." The "Migrants at the Ukraine/Poland Border" includes mostly black-and-white prints alongside color images and other digital files documenting Ukrainian refugees after Russia's invasion in 2022. Acquired as part of the Human Rights Archive.

Background

Scope and Content

The Darrin Zammit Lupi photojournalism archive includes five bodies of documentary work and web archives comprising 100 photographic prints and approximately 20,000 digital files of low-resolution and full resolution images; videos; supporting documents and data for various projects; and web archived content of his website.

The "Malta Detention" project consists of twenty color inkjet prints taken by Zammit Lupi and over 1800 digital files of images, contact sheets, and news articles for his work on African migrants and asylum seekers in Malta detention camps between 2004-2013. The "On Board the Aquarius" project includes twenty color inkjet prints and over 4000 digital image files, documents, data, videos, news articles, and interviews compiled in December 2017 on board the migrant search and rescue ship operated by SOS Méditerranée and Médecins sans frontières, which rescued migrants in the Mediterranean Sea and arrived in Pozzallo, Sicily. The "Journeys of Hope-Refugees in the Balkans" project consists of twenty color photographs and over 5000 digital image files, documents, and news articles compiled in 2016 documenting migrants and refugees in Croatia, Greece, Macedonia, and Serbia on assignment for the Jesuit Refugee Service. "Migrants in the Maltese Community" includes twenty color inkjet prints and over 8000 digital image files, news stories, and videos documenting the circumstances of migrants once they leave transitional housing or "open centers" in Malta between 2002-2018. "Migrants at the Ukraine/Poland Border" includes twenty prints, mostly in black-and-white, and over 1800 digital files of low resolution images mostly in color, contact sheets, and documents related to Zammit Lupi's work documenting Ukrainian refugees traveling across the border between Ukraine and Poland after Russia's invasion of Ukraine in 2022.

Biographical/Historical

Darrin Zammit Lupi (born 1968) is an award-winning photojournalist based in Malta. He has documented conditions in Albania and the former Yugoslavia, the South-East Asia tsunami tragedy, the refugee crisis during the war in Kosovo, the earthquake in L'Aquila, Italy, the war in Libya, and immigration and migration in Europe. Zammit Lupi started his photography career with The Malta Independent in 1992, but decided to turn freelance shortly afterwards. Through his work, he has won the Malta Journalism Award for Press Photography seven times and for Sport Photography three times, as well as a special award for Creativity in Photojournalism. The Societies for Photographers in the United Kingdom named him Overall Photographer of the Year (2016), Media Photographer of the Year (2013), Documentary Photographer of the Year (2014), and Street Photographer of the Year (2016). His work for Reuters has been published in newspapers, magazines, books, and online worldwide.

Zammit Lupi holds a Master's Degree with Distinction in Photojournalism and Documentary Photography from the University of the Arts, London. In 2014, he published Isle Landers, covering a decade's work on irregular immigration and asylum seekers in the Mediterranean that was exhibited in Malta, France, Luxembourg, and Australia. Some of Zammit Lupi's works are also in private collections and part of permanent collections at the National Museum of Fine Arts in Malta.

Collection Inventory

On Board the Aquarius, 2017 December 15-19

Physical Description: 1.5 Linear Feet

1 box 20 photographic prints; 16.73 Gigabytes

3210 files (110 tiff, 3035 jpg, 46 png, 11 mp4, 3 pdf, 2 doc, 1 VLC, 1 txt, and 1 xls)

Scope and Contents

This body of work comprises several thousand documentary images and supporting documents, data, videos, news stories, and interviews from the project "On Board the MV Aquarius, December 2017," by photojournalist Darrin Zammit Lupi, on assignment for the Reuters news agency. While on board the Aquarius, a migrant search and rescue ship operated by the non-profit organizations SOS Méditerranée and Médecins sans frontières, Zammit Lupi witnessed and documented the rescue of 320 migrants in the central Mediterranean, and their safe arrival in Pozzallo, Sicily.

Image formats include tiff files, digital contact sheets, jpeg image files, mp4 video files, and 20 color inkjet photographic prints measuring 20x24 inches. There are also screen shots of Reuters social media posts relating to this story that feature Zammit Lupi's images, logs, scripts, shot lists, demographic data summarizing the makeup of the migrants on board the rescue ship, and press releases in English, French, Spanish, Italian, Korean, and other languages. Five videos in mp4 format document the MV Aquarius rescue and a transfer of refugees from another ship; three are interviews with an Italian rescuer and two migrants who describe conditions in detention centers in Libya and on board the escape boats; and one is a news report video narrated by Zammit Lupi. Also includes scans of a 17-page journal kept by Zammit Lupi while aboard the rescue ship. The tiff images are immediately available through links in this series.

Most of the files and prints are arranged according to the timeline of events as photographed by Zammit Lupi.

Malta Detention, 2004-2013

Physical Description: 1.5 Linear Feet
1 box 20 photographic prints; 12.57 Gigabytes
1821 files (147 tiff, 1646 jpeg, 20 png, 8 pdf)

Scope and Contents

The color photographs in this series were taken by photojournalist Darrin Zammit Lupi over a period of nine years in detention camps for undocumented migrants near Valletta, the capital city of Malta. The images document migrants, chiefly from West Africa and Sub-Saharan regions, as they wait, sometimes for 18 months, for a decision on their status. There are close-up portraits of individuals, as well as group shots; settings include interiors as well as outside areas. There are photographs of immigrants protesting conditions in the camps and a few of immigrants on their way to trials in court. One sequence records Jacques Barrot, European Commissioner, visiting a detention center and meeting with protesters. All prints measure approximately 20x24 inches.

Electronic records (1821 files) also form an important part of this series. All images are in color. They include 147 tiff files; 1646 low-resolution jpegs from which the larger images were selected; 20 png images of contact sheets; and eight pdfs of Times of Malta newspaper articles on migrant detention camps, featuring Zammit Lupi's photographic work. The tiff images are immediately available through links in this series.

All image titles, captions, and other descriptions have been transcribed from the originals.

An African illegal immigrant's feet dangle through the window bars at the Safi detention centre in Safi, outside Valletta, July 17, 2012. Illegal immigrants arriving on the island of Malta are detained for up to 18 months, a policy which the United Nations High Commission for Refugees (UNHCR) has said urgently needs a comprehensive review following the death of a Malian immigrant while in custody last month, according to local media. There are currently around 1000 immigrants being held in detention, according to government officials. Photo: Darrin Zammit Lupi

Around 1,000 illegal immigrants are currently in detention in Malta. The Malta government insists the immigrants must be held in detention because their large numbers may cause problems to the economy, while the immigrants say they never intended to come to Malta in the first place and want to be allowed to go to Italy. A delegation of European Members of Parliament is visiting Malta in the coming days to draw up a report on illegal immigration.

Physical Description: Legacy id: MG_1648

Scope and Contents

Would-be immigrants walk in a courtyard at the Safi barracks detention centre for immigrants, which currently holds around 600 detainees, in Safi, outside Valletta July 19, 2013. Would-be immigrants who land in Malta face mandatory detention which can last for 18 months but figures show nearly half are allowed out sooner, following the granting of refugee status or humanitarian protection, according to official sources. Malta will be given concrete assistance by the European Commission to return failed asylum seekers to their country of origin, the government has announced.

Scope and Contents

An African illegal immigrant's feet dangle through the window bars at the Safi detention centre in Safi, outside Valletta, July 17, 2012. Illegal immigrants arriving on the island of Malta are detained for up to 18 months, a policy which the United Nations High Commission for Refugees (UNHCR) has said urgently needs a comprehensive review following the death of a Malian immigrant while in custody last month, according to local media. There are currently around 1000 immigrants being held in detention, according to government officials.

Journeys of Hope-Refugees in the Balkans, 2016

Physical Description: 1.5 Linear Feet

1 box 20 photographic prints; 21.1 Gigabytes

4070 Files (185 tiff, 3821 jpg, 49 png, 14 pdf, 1 docx)

Scope and Contents

The color photographs in this series were taken by photojournalist Darrin Zammit Lupi in January and February 2016 while on assignment for the Jesuit Refugee Service, an international Catholic organisation, at a time when huge numbers of refugees and migrants, mostly from Syria and Afghanistan, were attempting to reach Europe via Turkey. Together with writer Danielle Vella, author of the book "Journeys of Hope" (also included in this collection), he visited various hotspots in Macedonia, Croatia and Serbia and Greece. The images in the collection, a variety of close-ups of individuals and wide shots of groups of people within their environment, cover the arrival of refugees on the Greek island of Lesbos, life in a refugee camp on Lesbos, refugees arriving on the Greek mainland and making their way north to Macedonia and beyond, crossing Serbia and into Croatia, from where most hoped to reach countries such as Germany or the United Kingdom. All prints measure approximately 20x24 inches.

Electronic records (4070 files) also form an important part of this series. All images are in color. They include 185 tiff files; 3816 low-resolution jpgs from which the larger images were selected; 49 png images of contact sheets; 14 pdfs of Sunday Circle, Professional Imagemaker, and Times of Malta articles featuring Zammit Lupi's photographic work in English, French, Italian, and Spanish; 1 docx version of Vella's "Journeys of Hope." The tiff images are immediately available through links in this series.

Migrants within the Maltese Community, 2002-2018

Physical Description: 15 Gigabytes
8996 files (8762 JPEG, 122 TIFF, 108 PDF, 3 MPEG-4, 1 RTF)

Scope and Contents

The color photographs in this series were taken by photojournalist Darrin Zammit Lupi over a period of seventeen years, chiefly on assignment for the Times of Malta and Reuters and in some cases for NGOs and personal projects. The images document the circumstances of migrants once they leave Malta's "open centers," akin to refugee camps, and navigate Maltese society as well as the process of relocation to third countries. Images depict migrants, primarily from the Horn of Africa and elsewhere in Sub-Saharan Africa, in varied contexts: at a range of gatherings including celebrations, vigils, funerals, protests, and performances; in situations of transitional housing or displacement from housing; at work; and in transit. Most photographs depict the shared circumstances or activities of larger or smaller groups, while others depict individuals in close-up portraits or embedded in their larger environments. All prints measure approximately 20x24 inches.

Electronic records (8996 files) also form an important part of this series. All images are in color. They include 122 TIFFs, 8762 low-resolution JPEGs from which the larger images were selected; fifty-six PDFs of contact sheets; fifty-two PDFs of news articles featuring Zammit Lupi's photographic work, almost exclusively from the Times of Malta; three video recordings in MPEG-4; and one RTF.

Yonas Oukubamichael works at his Eritrean cuisine restaurant Selam, in Hamrun, Malta June 22, 2014. Yonas was 20 when he fled war and persecution in Eritrea in 2004. He paid smugglers to take him across the Sahara to Libya and then got on a rickety boat of immigrants all searching for a better life in Europe. The boat made it as far as Malta. After spending several months in a detention camp, Yonas started working 18 hours a day at a vegetable shop in the daytime and as a dishwasher at night. By 2011, he had saved up enough to open his own restaurant, Selma, serving Ethiopian and Eritrean cuisine in Hamrun, a small town just outside Malta's capital, Valletta. "My Maltese friends would always ask me what Eritrean food was like, so I would cook for them. Eventually I was cooking so much that it just made sense to open a restaurant., " he says. Today he employs three staff, with his Maltese girlfriend Stephanie helping out whenever things get particularly busy. He still works long hours, getting up at 5am each morning then spending the rest of the day hurrying between his restaurant, its kitchen and a chill-out lounge and internet cafe he's opened next door. Migrants at the Ukraine/Poland Border, 2022-2025

Scope and Contents

Contains physical and digital files for Zammit Lupi's work on Ukrainian refugees at the Ukraine/Poland border in Przemyśl and Medyka, Poland in April 2022, displaced as a result of the war with Russia. Includes twenty physical prints, 20x24 inches and mostly in black-and-white with two in color. Digital files include contact sheets, low-resolution images, ninety-six high-quality TIFF images, and a small number of documents. Prints correspond to a select number of the high-quality TIFF images. Low-resolution images feature mostly color shots taken at multiple angles. Images in the project portray Ukrainian refugees, including families, women, and children, often while traveling or waiting to depart from train or bus stations. Some images show assistance and support from non-governmental organizations and other individuals for refugees.
