Summary

Collection Title:

Radio Haiti papers, circa 1934-2003, bulk 1968-2003

Creator:

Radio Haiti-Inter

Abstract:

Radio Haïti-Inter was Haiti's first and most prominent independent radio station from the early 1970s until 2003. Under the direction of Jean Léopold Dominique and Michèle Montas, Radio Haiti was a voice of social change and democracy, speaking out against oppression and impunity while advocating for human rights and celebrating Haitian culture and heritage. The Radio Haiti papers contain mainly the station's on-air scripts and research materials covering a wide variety of subjects. The Radio Haiti audio recordings are described in a separate collection guide.

Background

Scope and Content

Radio Haiti was based in downtown Port-au-Prince on Rue du Quai until 28 November 1980, when Jean-Claude Duvalier's government cracked down on the independent press and human rights activists. Radio Haiti was ransacked, and the station's journalists were arrested then exiled. Many, though not all, of the paper record from the 1970s were destroyed in the 1980 crackdown. Radio Haiti reopened after Duvalier fell in 1986, in a new building on Route Delmas. The station closed again after the 30 September 1991 coup d'état that overthrew President Jean-Bertrand Aristide, and reopened in 1995 after the democratic government was restored. As a result of the repression the station and its journalists endured, most of the materials in Radio Haiti's paper archive span 1986 to 1991, and 1995 to 2003, though it also contains extensive external print materials (mainly newspapers and magazines) that Jean Dominique collected while in exile from 1980 to 1986 and from 1991 to 1994.

"Radio Haiti materials" refers to documents created by Radio Haiti's staff. These are mainly on-air scripts, but also include notes and correspondence. "External materials" refers to materials created by outside sources, which were used for research purposes by Radio Haiti's staff. These include, but are not limited to, press (Haitian, Haitian diaspora, and international news outlets), press releases, petitions and open letters from grassroots groups and civil society organizations, reports and other publications, and government communiqués and decrees.

Biographical/Historical

Radio Haïti-Inter was Haiti's first and most prominent independent radio station from the early 1970s until 2003. Under the direction of Jean Léopold Dominique and Michèle Montas, Radio Haiti was a voice of social change and democracy, speaking out against oppression and impunity while advocating for human rights and celebrating Haitian culture and heritage. The Radio Haiti papers contain mainly the station's on-air scripts and research materials.

The Radio Haiti collection is perhaps the most thorough documentation of late 20th century Haitian politics and history, including but not limited to the Duvalier regime and its aftermath; the nascent democratic movement amid military rule under the Conseil National de Gouvernement in the late 1980s; the first presidency, overthrow, return, and second presidency of Jean-Bertrand Aristide; the aftermath of the 1991-1994 coup years during which Haiti's democratically-elected government was in exile; and the first presidency of René Préval. Radio Haiti both covered and spoke out against impunity, calling for justice for victims of human rights violations and political oppression as well as victims of corruption and corporate malfeasance. With his background as an agronomist, Jean Dominique focused in particular on the political and land rights of dispossessed peasant farmers and the need for Haiti to strengthen and support national agricultural production. Radio Haiti advocated for freedom of the press and documented repression of the independent media, covered grassroots organizations and women's rights campaigns. Radio Haiti covered international relations, including the plight of undocumented Haitian refugees fleeing to the United States or the Bahamas (so-called "boat people"), Haitian cane-cutters in the Dominican Republic and repatriations of Haitian people from the Dominican Republic, US policy toward Haiti and US involvement in Haitian politics, neoliberal reform and structural adjustment policies. Radio Haiti promoted and showcased Haitian art and culture, including painting and sculpture, literature, poetry, theatre, music, history and national heritage, and other intellectual production. They highlighted Vodou as a meaningful and important part of national culture worthy serious analysis. The station focused extensively on key moments of repression and injustice, such as the 1987 Jean Rabel massacre of peasant farmers and the 1994 Raboteau massacre of Aristide partisans by the military and FRAPH paramilitary, and on important assassinations and disappearances, including but certainly not limited to liberation theology priests Jean-Marie Vincent and Jean "Ti Jan" Pierre-Louis, and, of course, the hired killing of Radio Haiti's own director, Jean Léopold Dominique.

Radio Haiti afforded as much consideration and airtime to the voices and concerns of peasant farmers from rural Haiti, members of grassroots organizations, Haitian braceros living on Dominican bateys, and residents of poor urban neighborhoods as it did to prominent politicians and intellectuals. By reporting largely in Haitian Creole, the language that all Haitians speak and understand, Radio Haiti made media and communication truly democratic, and showed Creole could be a language of serious political and intellectual inquiry.

Arrangement

In keeping with Radio Haiti's original order, the papers are organized by subject. It should be noted that these subjects frequently overlap (for example, materials about repression of peasant farmers by the army in the late 1980s can be found under "Army," "Human Rights," "Peasant Movements" and "Provisional Governments").

Station equipment

Marantz PMD-0201 field recorder, early 1980s

Box Equipment 001

Scope and Contents

Radio Haiti journalist Pierre Emmanuel explains, "This was Michèle's machine. No one was allowed to touch it without special permission. It was a Marantz, but its nickname was 'Prunelle' which means "apple of my eye." She came back from exile in the United States with it [in 1986]."

RCA Type 77-D microphone, early 1950s

Box Equipment 002

Scope and Contents

This microphone first belonged to the original Radio Haiti, before Jean Dominique bought the lease in the early 1970s. It was damaged beyond repair on November 28, 1980, when Duvalier's forces destroyed the station on Rue du Quai. When Duvalier fell in 1986 and Radio Haiti returned from exile, they moved to Delmas and brought this microphone with them so they would never forget what had happened. It was crushed in the January 2010 earthquake, which damaged the Radio Haiti building so badly that it had to be torn down.

Arrakis 500-SC broadcast console, circa 1980

Box Equipment 003

Scope and Contents

Broadcast console/mixer, made in Loveland, Colorado, featured in the opening scenes of Jonathan Demme's The Agronomist.

Dominique and Ian Martin, 1994-06-19

Box 197

Scope and Contents

Michael Putney of #This Week In South Florida# interviews Jean Dominique and British human rights advocate Ian Martin of MICIVIH about whether economic sanctions will be enough to force the military regime from power or whether military intervention will be necessary. Dominique says that the #phone call# option is always there # the US government could simply phone General Cédras and tell him to leave. Martin describes the Haitian army as a #force of internal repression# that was created by the United States. They discuss the Governors Island accord and the US government's decision to withdraw the USS Harlan County from Haitian waters after armed thugs affiliated with the military regime demonstrated at the docks.

NBC news report on democratization of Haiti and the return of Jean Dominique, 1986

Box 197

Scope and Contents

John Hart reports from Haiti on the return of Jean Dominique in March 1986. Includes footage of Dominique arriving at the airport in Port-au-Prince. Dominique describes how broadcasting in Haitian Creole, with its "mmhmmms" and other nonverbal utterances, allowed people to express their beliefs without stating them: in one mmmhmm, "there is three Macoutes involved." Dominique explains the exploitation of the Haitian poor by the Macoutes and the chefs de section, and how the dechoukaj of Macoute elements from the government must not also destroy the good parts of the government. Also includes a report from Parisse, in the Nord-Est, where people describe their poverty and their hopes for democracy. (Tape also includes a brief report on Radio Martí, which broadcasts news from the US to Cuba; President Ronald Reagan declares, "Cuba sí, Castro no." Also includes what appears to be raw footage of the aftermath of a collision between a bus and a car on I-95 in Miami.)
