Background

Scope and Content

This collection documents Wolfgang Stolper's work as a professor and economist, including his work for various U.S. and international agencies on economic missions to Nigeria, Tunisia, Togo, Benin, and Malawi. The bulk of the material spans include correspondence, reports, statistical and demographic data

The Nigeria Series, the first and largest, contains his work files from his job as head of the Economic Planning Unit (EPU) in the Federal Ministry of Economic Development in Lagos, Nigeria from 1961-62 (sent there under the auspices of the Ford Foundation). As head of the EPU, Stolper co-authored the first ever National Development Plan, (1962-68) for the Federation of Nigeria. As such, his papers present an extensive and thorough picture of the Nigerian economy at that time. Once top secret files, they include detailed statistical data on each industry, industrialization plans, reports on marketing board policies, maps, and demographics data. Of great interest to researchers on the Nigerian economy might be Stolper's personal diary, a 393-page typewritten account of his two years in Nigeria.

The next two series pertain to his work in Tunisia (1972) and other economic missions to Africa, including Dahomey (now Benin) and Togo (1967), Benin (1983), and Malawi (1981). He was sent to these countries under the auspices of USAID, the UN, and the International Bank for Reconstruction and Development (IBRD, also known as the World Bank). The files from these three series alone make up eight of the fourteen storage boxes that house the entire collection. Also in the collection are some notes, papers and drafts of Professor Stolper's work pertaining to Joseph Schumpeter.

At present, there is nothing (aside from reprints of the article) in this collection of papers dealing with the Stolper-Samuelson Theorem.

The fourth series, Writings, contains notes, drafts, manuscripts and reprints of any articles found in the collection but excluding those related to Joseph Schumpeter. Some highlights include drafts of "Investments in Africa South of the Sahara," notes and drafts of his book Planning Without Facts: Lessons in Resource Allocation from Nigeria's Development, and articles on smuggling in Africa.

The fifth series, Speeches, Lectures and Conferences, contains material (excluding those pertaining to Schumpeter) from public speaking engagements and conferences attended by Professor Stolper. One item that might be of interest is a speech recorded on magnetic tape titled "Problems of our Foreign Aid Program" that dates from around the 1950s.

The Schumpeter series contains some notes, papers and drafts of Professor Stolper's work pertaining to Joseph Alois Schumpeter. Stolper was afforded a unique and personal relationship with Schumpeter, studying under him first at the University of Bonn and then at Harvard, and also through Schumpeter's position as a close friend of Gustav and Toni Stolper (Wolfgang's father and stepmother, respectively). Included in this series is a book (in German) that Professor Stolper co-wrote with Horst Claus Recktenwald and Frederic M.

Scherer titled Über Schumpeters »Theorie der wirtschaftlichen Entwicklung« (1988).

Biographical/Historical

Wolfgang F. Stolper (1912-2002) was a white Austrian-American economist and professor of economics at Swarthmore College (1941-1949) and the University of Michigan (1949-2002). He also held various visiting professorships/lecturing posts at the Universities of Zurich, Heidelberg, and Munster. His professional affiliations included membership in the American Economic Association, the Nigerian Economic Association, the International Institute of Public Finance, and the International Schumpeter Society (founding president).

Stolper specialized in international economic development and trade and was also interested in the history of economic thought. He co-developed the "Stolper-Samuelson Theorem" with fellow economist Paul Samuelson (see "Protection and Real Wages," Review of Economic Studies, November 1941). This theorem, one of the core results of the Heckscher-Ohlin model of international trade, essentially states that an increase in the relative domestic price of a good (for example, via the imposition of a tariff) unambiguously raises the real return to the factor of production used intensively in producing that good (and lowers the real return to the other factor). This paper analyzed precisely for the first time the effect of trade or protection on real wages.

In addition to academics, Stolper worked for number of international economic missions on behalf of the Ford Foundation, U.S. Agency for International Development (USAID), the United Nations, and the International Bank for Reconstruction and Development (IBRD, later the World Bank). He served as the Head of the Economic Planning Unit, Federal Ministry of Economic Development, Nigeria, from 1961-1962, and was a member of several economic development projects in Tunisia (USAID, 1963-1965), Togo and Dahomey (International Bank for Reconstruction and Development, 1967), Nigeria (US Agency for International Development, 1970), Malawi (United Nations, 1981), and Benin (IBRD, 1983).

Nigeria, 1961-1962

Scope and Contents

Stolper's work files from his job as head of the Economic Planning Unit for the Federal Ministry of Economic Development in Lagos. Sent there under the auspices of the Ford Foundation, one of his accomplishments was to help coordinate and write the first-ever National Development Plan for Nigeria. The files, after the diary, are arranged alphabetically. Highlights include his personal diary; drafts of an article titled "The Development of Nigeria" commissioned and published by Scientific American; detailed information and data on all aspects of the Nigerian economy; and various letters which are dispersed throughout the series.
