Summary

Collection Title:

Nicholas School of the Environment records, 1916-ongoing

Creator:

Nicholas School of the Environment (Duke University)

Abstract:

Duke University's Nicholas School of the Environment traces its beginnings to the founding of the Duke School of Forestry in 1938. In the 1990s two other entities, the Duke Marine Laboratory and the Duke Department of Geology, were combined with Forestry to form the Nicholas School. The Records of Duke University's Nicholas School of the Environment, 1916-ongoing, contain materials created from the school's inception as the Duke School of Forestry (1938) through all its subsequent names: the School of Forestry and Environmental Studies, the School of the Environment, and the Nicholas School of the Environment and Earth Sciences. The collection also includes material about the history of Duke Forest and its use as a teaching and research facility. The earliest materials comprise the papers of Clarence F. Korstian, first director of the Forest and first dean of the School, including his correspondence, early reports about the Forest and the School, and his involvement in the Ecological Society of America, the North Carolina Forestry Association, and the International Union of Forest Research Organizations. The bulk of the collection consists of the School's general administrative records, including annual reports, admissions records, enrollment statistics, information on degrees granted, faculty history and meetings, and surveys and meetings of the School's alumni. Visual materials include posters, color and black-and-white photographs, negatives, slides, and digital photographs that document the School of Forestry and the Duke Marine Laboratory.

Background

Scope and Content

The Records of Duke University's Nicholas School of the Environment contain materials created during the school's entire history, from its founding as the Duke School of Forestry, in 1938, through all its subsequent names: the School of Forestry and Environmental Studies, the School of the Environment, and the Nicholas School of the Environment and Earth Sciences. The collection also includes materials about the closely-related Duke Forest, especially its history and the School's management and use of it as a teaching and research facility. The earliest materials here comprise the papers of Clarence F. Korstian, first director of the Forest and first dean of the School; his files include his personal correspondence, early reports about the Forest and the School, and material about several professional organizations, particularly the Ecological Society of America, the North Carolina Forestry Association, and the International Union of Forest Research Organizations. Following Korstian's papers, the bulk of the collection consists of the School's general administrative records, including all the following: annual reports, admissions records, enrollment statistics, and information on degrees granted; faculty history, curricula, and meetings; and extensive data on the School's alumni, especially alumni surveys and newsletters and meetings of the Alumni Association. The administrative records are supplemented by extensive visual materials; these contain a small selection of posters and other promotional materials about the School, but primarily consist of approximately 5000 color and black-and-white photographs, negatives, slides, and digital photographs that document a wide variety of faculty and student history and activities at both the School of Forestry and the Duke Marine Laboratory. Arranged in order by accession number, with several small, related accessions merged into single series.

Biographical/Historical

Forestry studies at Duke University can be traced to 1931, when several of the nearby small farms and forestlands the university had been purchasing since the mid-1920s were formally named as Duke Forest. When the School of Forestry was established in 1938, it was the first graduate school in its field in the South. A chronology of its history follows below.

Chronology

Date	Description
1930	Clarence F. Korstian appointed as first Director of Duke Forest
1931	Duke Forest formally named
1932	First classes in forestry taught at Duke University
1938	School of Forestry founded, with Korstian appointed as Dean
1970s	Curriculum expanded to include broader range of ecological sciences
1974	Renamed School of Forestry and Environmental Studies
1991	Merged with the Duke Marine Laboratory (founded 1938) and renamed School of the Environment
1995	Renamed Nicholas School of the Environment following upon gift of Peter and Virginia Nicholas
1997	Division of Earth and Ocean Sciences created when the former Department of Geology (founded 1936) joins school
2000	School re-named Nicholas School of the Environment and Earth Sciences

Date	Description
2008-2009	Name reverted to Nicholas School of the Environment

Physical Description: 3 boxes

Scope and Contents note

These two accessions comprise the records of Clarence F. Korstian, first director of Duke Forest and first dean of the School of Forestry, and cover some forty-five years of his career, both prior to and following his Duke appointment in 1930. Duke materials document his years at the School of Forestry and include early reports to the President, studies such as the Loblolly Pine Project, and his involvement in several professional organizations, including the Ecological Society of America, the International Union of Forest Research Organizations, and the North Carolina Forestry Association. Arranged in alphabetical order by topic except for the first folder, a 1959 interview of Korstian about his long career.

Scope and Contents note

The largest of these accessions, UA 89-54, and the four smaller ones primarily comprise FES Alumni Association activities and records and have been interfiled together, with original accession number noted on individual folders. Materials include alumni surveys, correspondence, minutes of the Alumni Association's Executive Council meetings, reunions, and routine mailings to members. A small group of general files, unrelated to the Alumni Association, is gathered at the end of these accessions: these include various annual reports and some files about the proposed phaseout of the School of Forestry in the mid-1970s.
