Background

---

Scope and Content

The University Archives Web Archive Collection consists of approximately website snapshots harvested between 2010 and the present. The majority of the collection are Duke University-affiliated sites, either built on domains owned by the University or on external platforms by affiliated offices, departments, or organizations.

The collection is arranged into eight series: Administration, Academics, Athletics, Public Relations, Student Organizations, Campus Controversies, Miscellaneous, Publications, and Student Activism. The Administration Series includes websites of Duke administrative offices and units. The Academics Series includes websites of academic colleges, departments, and programs, as well as research institutes, interdisciplinary programs, and materials related to faculty. The Athletics Series includes websites of the Duke Athletics program as well as student-run club athletics. The Public Relations Series includes websites related to Duke's communication with employees, the government, students, and the general public. The Student Organizations Series is the largest grouping in the collection, and includes websites of general interest groups, the Greek system, honors societies, selective living groups, arts organizations, political and social cause organizations, religious and cultural organizations, service organizations, and student government. The Campus Controversies Series includes websites collected about controversial events involving Duke and its student body. The Miscellaneous Series consists of several websites that do not fit into the above series. The Publications Series consists of the websites of various publications produced by Duke and Duke-affiliated organizations. The Student Activism series consists of websites, social media content, and individual blog posts and online articles related to various movements on campus led by students.

Due to the size of the collection, the techniques and tools of web harvesting, and the evolving nature of the Internet, some websites have been crawled more comprehensively than others and are represented more faithfully than others.

Biographical/Historical

The University Archives Web Archives Collection was compiled by University Archives staff beginning in 2010. The collection was built using the Internet Archive's Archive-It service for capturing and preserving web-based digital content.

Belle Knox Subseries, 2014

Scope and Contents

Websites in this subseries were captured as a document of the student's own response to media exposure. Rumors regarding the student's participation in adult films began to circulate on an online message board and the student gave an anonymous interview to Towerview (The Chronicle). Her real name and personal information circulated online, prompting coverage from external media sources. The subseries includes editorials penned by the student, two interviews conducted with text publications, and three audiovisual interviews.

Call To Prayer Subseries, 2015

Scope and Contents

The websites in this subseries were captured to document the University's decision and subsequent reversal to give the Duke Muslim community the opportunity to chant the adhan, the Muslim call to prayer, from the Duke Chapel bell tower on Fridays. The subseries includes the associate dean for religious life's editorial announcing the call to prayer, and two articles about Duke's reversal including reactions from the student body.
